Overview

This directory / website resource has been co-produced in partnership with volunteers, service users and carers, Keele University, MIND (a mental health charity), Midlands Partnership NHS Foundation Trust and The Q Improvement Lab bringing people and organisations together to explore, develop and test ideas to make progress on health and care.

This is part of a project designed to improve the awareness of and support for mental health needs of people living with persistent neck and back pain.

Many people who have mental health problems are able to recover if they get the right sort of help and support. People can often feel much better and more positive about themselves and the future once they have sought treatment. Being in pain for a long time can make you feel sad, depressed and worried as well as isolated and fearful. When you are sad, low or worried your pain can feel worse too.

One of the biggest hurdles to overcome is that first step 'recognising that you may need help' and then taking the first steps to finding help. For most people the first person they may speak to is their General Practitioner (GP); however there are also many national support organisations and local groups that provide advice and information to support wellbeing.

There are things that you can do to manage your pain and mood. They won't take the pain away but can improve your day to day life. Information contained within this directory will help you, families and carers find the services to support wellbeing.

Think about what has helped you in the past when you have felt stressed or overwhelmed. It could be yoga, relaxation, mindfulness, trying a new recipe, talking with a friend, distracting yourself with a puzzle, making time for self-soothing (taking a bath for example). What helps will be different from person to person - use what works for you.

Visit our website www.beefree.org.uk where we will introduce you to five ways to help yourself (Hive Five).

Coronavirus - physical distancing and the potential impact on our health and wellbeing

Coronavirus has changed life as we know. We have all made huge changes to the way we work, exercise, socialise, shop, manage our health and wellbeing, educate our children and take care of family and friends.

More information and guidance for the public on the mental health and wellbeing aspects of coronavirus (COVID-19) can be found here.

For more information click here (text sits behind the link) We have seen our people coming together; chatting with neighbours at social distance over the fence or the balcony, shopping for family and friends who were shielding.

During this time, you may be bored, frustrated or lonely. You may also feel low, worried and anxious or be concerned about your health or that of those close to you. These are all common reactions to the difficult situation we face. People who already have mental health conditions can face increasing challenges at this time, particularly in education, in work and when seeking work or when trying to access care for their physical and mental health needs.

You may feel a sense of loneliness which is having a knock on effect on your mental health. If you are struggling with anxiety and depression and feel that you may harm yourself; don't feel you are alone, there is help and support for you. If you need to get help urgently please click here for advice. No judgement, just simple understanding.

It is important that we rest in order to help us feel as refreshed as we can and to recharge our batteries. We know that rest is important, but it's particularly true given the current pandemic. For a range of different reasons many of us have felt under strain over the past months and may be feeling exhausted.

Take time to rest and unwind...

When we think about rest we may sit back and do nothing and think that's what rest is. It can feel difficult doing nothing and we may try it and still feel unrested and think it is not working.

We may wake after sleeping still feeling exhausted. The issue is likely not to be sleep but a combination of things that can affect our wellness which can be overlooked in the hope that they will go away.

If you feel like you are tired and struggling to keep your eyes open, even walking to bed may feel like moving through quicksand. The most common form of rest is sleep, so think about going to bed a little earlier, if possible. This probably sounds pretty obvious, but catching up on rest can also mean taking deep breaths during the work day, or making time for a virtual yoga class to give your body a stretch. You may also wish to consider other gentle movements such as a short walk, mild physical exercise or try out meditation.

Getting the proper type of rest requires us to think about what we may be missing, for example if it may be mental rest that we are missing out on, we might have difficulty with concentration. You may realise you've been staring at the same page of a book for 10 minutes, or just sent an email that didn't make sense. The next time you need a break, you could try to turn off your screen and take a few moments to relax.

It is important to take regular breaks but that is easier said than done, perhaps consider ways you could add in some rest during the day, maybe stopping to take time to eat together with those around you. Talk to friends and family and say how you are feeling, they are probably feeling the same and would welcome a chat.

How you choose to rest is very personal to you and will very much depend on your needs. For some, this may mean watching television, catching up on box-sets, whilst others prefer to catch up with an old friend or simply spending time alone doing what you enjoy the most.

Chances are you are using your creativity more than you think, enjoying everyday activities such as gardening, baking, cooking, arts and crafts, going for a walk, jigsaw and crossword puzzles, or getting engrossed in a book. Try out new recipes - have a virtual 'bake - off' competition with your friends. Learn a new skill - try your hand at painting, knitting, starting a personal journal or simply daydream for a little while - we are all tapping into our creative side.

For some, faith is a great healer. That could mean practicing your religion if you have one, or seeking out your religion. We all have our individual ways of coping, time spent in nature and also meditations are other potential opportunities for spiritual rest.

Over the recent months we have been reliant on technology to enable us to communicate to friends and family and to work from home. If you are working from home you will know the importance of a good work life balance. Be kind to yourself, consider taking a night off from technology and give your eyes a rest. Instead, relax with aromatherapy or scented candles and unwind.

Please note: As a result of COVID 19 pandemic some organisations may not be operating or may have limited capacity to operate normally. It is advised you check with them before turning up.

Sleeping well

Pain can disturb sleep and can impact on your mood, making pain worse. Sleeping well is important for your physical and mental health which enables your body to repair and be fit and ready for another day. Getting quality sleep is one of the best things you can do for your health.

Being worried or anxious can cause sleep difficulties, which can then cause more anxiety and the lack of concentration. Not sleeping at night, sleeping during the day and waking early in the morning are common and affect many of us. Worrying about the lack of sleep does not help; instead try to find ways that relax your mind before going to bed.

Below are a few tips for getting a good night's sleep:

- ✓ Writing a 'to do' list for the next day can organize your thoughts and clear your mind of any distractions
- ✓ A warm bath will help your body reach a temperature that's ideal for rest
- ✓ Relaxation exercises such as light yoga help to relax the muscles
- ✓ Reading a book or listening to music relaxes the mind
- ✓ Create a restful sleeping environment
- ✓ Reduce caffeine especially in the evenings
- ✓ Have a regular 'going to bed' routine
- ✓ Nicotine is a stimulant - reduce your smoking if you can
- ✓ Avoid alcohol as this can cause disrupted sleep
- ✓ Undertake exercise regularly - such as swimming and walking

Reading

Reading can be a wonderful and healthy escape from the stress of everyday life. Simply by opening a book, you allow yourself to be invited into a world that distracts you from your daily stress. Reading can relax your body by lowering your heart rate and easing the tension in your muscles. It doesn't have to be a bestselling novel, if you enjoy gardening, a gardening magazine or browse through a cookery book all of which can help you to relax. Dedicate 30 minutes to read every day in a quiet place where you won't be interrupted.

Listening to audiobooks has many benefits including relaxation and can also boost your mental health. Just like reading books, listening to audiobooks can also reduce stress and calm the mind. Many people listen to audiobooks at bedtime, helping them to fall asleep and improve the quality of sleep. BBC Sounds app is a great way to listen to BBC audio on your mobile or tablet; be it your favorite programs, podcasts, radio station and music all in one place.

Eating well

Eating a healthy, balanced diet is an important part of maintaining good health and can help you feel your best.

Fresh fruit and vegetables contain all the things you need to keep you healthy and your immune system happy. Eat plenty and try to include as many different colours of fruit and vegetables as you can to ensure you benefit from the full range of nutrients.

Try to include food from each of the four main food groups every day:

- Bread and cereals
- Fruit and vegetables
- Dairy products such as milk, cheese and yoghurt
- Meat, fish, eggs, pulses (peas, beans and lentils) and nuts

Eat Well - NHS

www.nhs.uk/live-well/eat-well

Eat a well-balanced diet with a good calcium supply. Calcium is important for strong bones. Foods that give you the best calcium are; milk, cheese and yoghurts. Also good are bread, green leafy vegetables such as cabbage, baked beans and fish with soft bones such as sardines.

- Try not to skip breakfast
- Do not get thirsty - keep hydrated by drinking water
- Base your meals on things like brown rice
- Aim to eat at least 5 portions of a range of fruit and vegetables every day - that's 5 portions of fruit and veg in total
- Eat more fish, including one portion of fish a week such as tuna or salmon
- Cut down on saturated fat (the kind of fat found in butter and lard and fatty cuts of meat) and sugar for example sugary drinks, cakes and biscuits
- Eat less salt
- Be active and aim for a healthy weight

The British Dietetics Association has loads of simple advice on how to eat well.

Staying hydrated

The importance of drinking enough water is essential not only for your physical health, but for your mental health as well. The human body needs water to survive, every organ and cell needs to stay hydrated in order for the body to function as its best.

A good way to determine if you need to drink more water is to check the colour of your urine. The darker your urine is the more water you need to drink. If your urine is light or has no colour, then you are well hydrated. Other signs of dehydration include tiredness, dry mouth, headache, and dizziness

Some people struggle to drink water because they don't like the taste. Try changing the taste by adding fruit such as lemon, cucumber or mint.

The benefits of staying hydrated:

- ✓ Increase in Energy and Improved Productivity – Dehydration can cause tiredness and can affect how your brain works. If you're feeling like your thinking skills aren't at their usual speed it may be time to drink some water
- ✓ Improved Physical Performance – Physical activity causes your body to lose a lot of fluids. Staying hydrated before, during, and after exercise can make your workout feel better. Water can keep your performance up while exercising and prevent tiredness after.
- ✓ Weight Loss – Sometimes when you feel hungry, it may be because your body simply needs water. Drinking water will not satisfy hunger but it can help to control the calories day to day. The next time you feel hungry, try drinking water first and it may surprise you.
- ✓ Mood Booster – When your body is hydrated it is performing well which helps to put you in a good mood. If you notice yourself slipping into a bad mood drinking water can help.
- ✓ Headache Prevention – Headaches are often due to not drinking enough and can be relieved by drinking water. It's important to stay hydrated to avoid headaches and migraines, particularly if you are likely to get them.

Getting active

Regular physical activity and exercise is important for mind and body. You may worry that activity makes pain worse, but it isn't always the case, if you're not used to being active - remember to start slowly. Remember exercise should not be painful.

Any increase in activity will be good for you; swimming, walking, exercise classes, yoga and gardening are all good examples. It's important to choose activities that you enjoy which will keep you motivated and can easily be built into your everyday life. It doesn't have to be a big change to your daily habits, but it could make a big difference on your health.

Below are a few tips to increase your activity:

- Take a walk - around the block
- Climb the stairs more often
- Weed the garden
- Avoid sitting for long periods of time
- Walk to the local shops whenever you can

Vitamin D

Vitamin D is an essential nutrient that your body needs to keep bones, teeth and muscles healthy. A lack of vitamin D can lead to bone deformities.

Vitamin D is often referred to as “the sunshine vitamin” because the sun is one of the best sources of this nutrient. Take precautions, but 15 – 20 minutes of sunlight on arms, hands and face each day during the summer will enable your body to store vitamin D.

Calcium is lost from bone and makes it more fragile and more likely to break. Bone strength is formed in childhood and young adulthood. After the age of 35, bone begins to lose strength. After the menopause, the rate of the loss of bone strength increases, but men are affected by Osteoporosis too.

Weight-bearing exercise

High, medium and low-impact weight-bearing exercises can help build bones and keep them strong. If you have broken a bone due to osteoporosis or are at risk of breaking a bone, you may need to avoid high impact exercises. If you are not sure, you should check with your healthcare provider.

Gardening and Nature

Gardens no matter how small are a connection to nature and a place to mend and recuperate. Gentle exercise and peace of mind can help the healing process and what better place to access both than in a garden.

The benefits of spending time in nature have been widely known and more recently stressed as a beneficial activity during the lockdown period of the coronavirus pandemic.

Nurturing plants and flowers, growing vegetables from seed or simply walking in a garden encourages a feeling of well-being. There are many restorative qualities of gardening whether in your own garden or as a group activity is well worth considering as an aid to wellbeing.

“We know that gardening is good for you. It is fantastic all-round exercise”

Nature

Nature is important to our health – daily contact with nature is linked to better health, reduced stress and a general feeling of wellbeing.

Humans have needed to survive and thrive since we first arrived on the planet and everything we needed was provided by the natural world around us: food, water, medicine, nutrients, materials for shelter and natural cycles such as climate and the changing seasons. If we take the time to look around we can see that nature provides us with wonderful views, green open spaces, woods and forests, the sound of birds singing or the wind as it moves through the trees. The gentle trickle of a stream soothes and calms the mind or the rushing of a river reminds us to listen and enjoy the constant contribution nature makes to our planet.

It is easy to think that nature will always be with us but every day we are hearing about animals, birds, insects and plants being listed as endangered. Wildlife on our planet is on the decline and however smart we have become as a species without nature we cannot survive. Engage with the natural world whenever you can. The healing properties of time spent in nature are underestimated as we have become consumed with our busy lives. Take a moment to relax and observe the beauty that is all around us. It is a precious thing available to enjoy whenever we need to unwind.

“Look deep into nature,
and then you will understand everything better”

Albert Einstein

Ways to engage with nature:

- Pack a backpack and head for the hills or follow a nature trail
- Prepare a picnic basket and visit a local park
- Go walking on the beach
- Walk the dog in some nice natural surroundings
- Lay on the grass and watch the clouds float by
- Take up gardening or just sit quietly in your garden
- Visit a forest and enjoy the beauty of trees
- Listen to the birds and the gentle hum of the insects
- Walk in urban surroundings and appreciate other people's gardens

Nature is on our doorstep all year round, even in winter wrap up warm and enjoy the icy landscape. The miracle of the changing seasons holds its own magic and brings a different kind of healing throughout the year. If you live in the country or by the sea make the most of your environment. If you live in a city try to seek out nature in your area, it is never far away...

Getting creative

Don't let pain and mood stop you doing the things that you enjoy. Both of these can impact on our creativity. Poor concentration, low confidence, lack of energy or motivation can affect us and make it difficult to begin or complete creative tasks.

Be kind to yourself. You may feel that the results of your creativity are not good enough - with creativity it's the process that matters, rather than the end result. If a creative activity leaves you feeling stressed, angry or upset it may be that this activity is not for you at this time. Give yourself a break or try something new. Whatever you do creatively, congratulate yourself on making the effort to try something different.

We are all creative, it's just that we express our creativity in different ways. Try to find what suits you and your lifestyle. There are many things to choose from:

- Craft activities - knitting, crochet, embroidery and sewing requires concentration which may help to calm an anxious mind.
- Cooking - Turning simple ingredients into something delicious uses your brain in a creative way.
- Visual Arts - There are lots of things to discover, drawing, painting, clay making are just a few. Photography using your phone is a great way of being creative especially in natural surroundings. Colouring and doodling can be a useful tool for helping to relieve stress and anxiety.
- Writing - All forms of writing can help you to express yourself and to use your mind creatively. Examples of creative writing could include starting a diary or journal where you can look back on your good days for inspiration. Poetry is a great way to get your creative juices flowing, just a few lines will get you started.

“Creativity is contagious, pass it on”

Albert Einstein

- Puzzles – Problem solving is a creative act and there are a wide range that you can try, either on your own or with company. Jigsaws, crosswords, scrabble and Sudoku are just a few.
- Music – Learning to play an instrument is well worth trying. If that's not for you, what about singing? It can make you feel good and cheer you up.
- Movement – As well as physical activity movements there are also various forms of dancing you can try, even if it's in your own kitchen!

Some of the benefits of creativity:

- ✓ Increased confidence
- ✓ Stress and anxiety relief
- ✓ New ideas
- ✓ Self-expression
- ✓ A greater sense of freedom
- ✓ Feeling of pride
- ✓ Inventiveness
- ✓ Promotes thinking and problem solving
- ✓ Let's you have fun

Where to get help for self-harm

It's important to know that support is available for anyone who self-harms (deliberate injury to oneself) or thinks about self-harm, as well as their friends and family.

It is best to speak to a General Practitioner (a doctor) about self-harm, you may also find it helpful to speak to a free-listening service or support organisations which offer confidential (trusted with a private) advice from trained volunteers. You can talk about anything that's upsetting you no matter how hard this may feel.

If you need urgent help now for a mental crisis or emergency and are not able to speak to your local NHS urgent mental health helpline call 111 or call your GP and ask for an emergency appointment.

If you have seriously harmed yourself - for example, by taking a drug overdose, call 999 for an ambulance or go straight to Accident and Emergency or ask someone else to call 999 or take you to Accident and Emergency.

Free helplines for when you're feeling unhappy and need help. Unless stated otherwise, they're open 24 hours a day, every day.

Domestic violence and abuse

Domestic violence or abuse can happen to anyone. Domestic violence, also called domestic abuse includes physical, emotional and sexual abuse in couple relationships or between family members.

Domestic violence and abuse can happen to men or women and includes the following types of abuse:

- ✓ Psychological
- ✓ Physical
- ✓ Sexual
- ✓ Financial
- ✓ Emotional

If you have been affected it is important to know there are organisations that can give you advice and help. If you are the victim of an abusive relationship you may need somewhere safe to stay, either alone or with your children. Refuges provide somewhere safe for people and their children to stay and to think about what to do next.

Further information:

Support for Women

The National Domestic Abuse Helpline is a free phone 24 hour helpline which provides advice and support to women and can refer them to emergency accommodation. You can contact them on 0808 2000 247.

Support for Men

Call the Men's Advice Line on 0808 8010327 that will provide you with practical advice and information.

Free from landlines and mobile phones within the UK. Your call will not appear on itemized bills. You can also call free from BT pay phones.

Support for those responsible for abuse

Glow provides a range of services for adults aimed at promoting healthy relationships. Their preventative services are available for anyone using violence and abuse in their relationship and who wants to change their behaviour.

They provide a range of support options to help you stop hurting the ones that you love. Most importantly, their help is there for you if you want to change.

Need someone to talk to? Contact them on: 0330 0945 559

Support and help for addiction

If you have an addiction, you're not alone. Addiction is defined as not having control over doing, taking or using something to the point where it could be harmful to you.

Addiction is most commonly associated with gambling, drugs, alcohol and nicotine, but it's possible to be addicted to just about anything.

There are lots of reasons why addictions begin. In the case of drugs, alcohol and nicotine, these substances affect the way you feel, both physically and mentally. These feelings can be enjoyable and create a powerful urge to use the substances again.

Gambling may result in a similar "high" after a win, followed by a strong urge to try again and recreate that feeling. This can develop into a habit that becomes very hard to stop.

Further information:

To speak to someone in confidence about any type of addiction, you can call the Samaritans for free on 116 123.

Housing and mental health

It can sometimes feel really difficult to ask for help with housing problems, but there are people you can talk to who will be able to help and advise you whatever the problem.

There may be a range of reasons why you're experiencing problems in your current home. Disability or health problems which may be made worse by the property, struggling with a relationship breakdown or unable to pay the bills and rent / mortgage only add to the worry.

It is important you talk to someone who can advise and help you. The Housing Advice Charity Shelter will offer you free local advice on:

- ✓ Homelessness
- ✓ Private renting
- ✓ Tenancy deposits
- ✓ Mortgage repossession
- ✓ Eviction
- ✓ Repairs
- ✓ Benefits
- ✓ Council housing

Your Local Authority and Citizens Advice will also advise on many kinds of housing problems.

If you are worried about someone you know who is homeless or sleeping rough please contact Brighter Futures on 01782 406000.

Arthritis and self-help resources

Self-help resources can be a way of people getting some initial support, strategies or information around a particular difficulty.

Getting involved

There are many ways you can take part with Midlands Partnership Foundation NHS Trust. You can become involved (take part) and use your experience to help others and improve services.

Service User and Carer Involvement

If you have experience of using our services, or care for someone who does, you can become involved in the Trust's work, have your voice heard and take part in joint working on a wide range of projects and activities. People who use our services and their carers are at the heart of everything we do. By using your skills, interest and ideas you can bring a whole new point of view to the planning and delivery of those services.

Being an Involvement Representative for the Trust can also have a positive impact on your wellbeing and help us to achieve the perfect patient experience. As an involvement representative you will be offered training, you will also be entitled to reimbursement for your travel expenses and some work may allow you to be paid in line with Trust policy.

Mystery Shoppers Wanted

(a person who visits a service to tell us how well we are doing or where we can do better)

Would you like to help improve your local physical, mental health and adult social care services? Your feedback from being a Mystery Shopper can help us to shape our services, give us the opportunity to share good practice and make improvements. Mystery Shopping is a way for us to gather feedback from existing service users and carers.

To have an informal chat about service user and carer involvement, mystery shoppers or to become involved, please contact the team on 0300 790 7000 or email us involvement@mpft.nhs.uk.

Volunteering at Midlands Partnership NHS Foundation Trust can be a rewarding experience for anyone looking to gain hands-on experience in their future profession, make a difference to the lives of those in their community and expand their knowledge while providing support to our staff.

Key Benefits of Volunteering:

- ✓ Experience the huge variety of roles, clinical and non-clinical, within the Trust and the NHS
- ✓ Increase awareness of what's involved in delivering health and social care
- ✓ Supporting you in your career journey
- ✓ Service users' care plans may involve volunteering as part of their journey to recovery

Most of our volunteering opportunities will be advertised on NHS Jobs. This will ensure all pre-placement checks are completed for our records and will ultimately speed up the process of hiring volunteers. Complete a volunteer application form here. Once we have received your form, we will contact the relevant area to facilitate the perfect role for you.

If you require any assistance or further information, please email volunteering@mpft.nhs.uk.

Wellbeing & Recovery College

Text sitting behind the link Within the Wellbeing & Recovery College the aim is to provide wellbeing and recovery-focused education courses that are accessible to everyone within our local communities and work together to create an environment of hope, control and opportunity for us all.
